The Vindictive Monkey.—[Those who are determined to wreak their revenge on persons who injure or ill treat them, will do well to remember what animal they resemble when they do so! Will rational beings be willing to act like the brute monkey?]

A painter was once busily employed in decorating, with fancy colors, some carved work on the stern of a French brig which lay in the harbor of Marseilles—and had a stage suspended for that purpose. A monkey which belonged to the captain of an American vessel, moored almost in contact with the stern of the brig appeared much interested in the progress of the brig, appeared much interested in the progress of the decorations, and watched the artist very closely— and occasionally as if he wished to criticise or ridi-cule the performance, he would grin and chatter most furiously.

The painter, although at first amused, soon became indignant at the insolent bearing of the monkey, and while jacko was in the midst of a critical dissertation, and appeared hugely tickled at being able to discompose the nerves of the artist, the latter thrust his largest brush well charged, with pose the nerves of the artist, the latter thrust his largest brush, well charged with a beautiful verdigris green, full in the mouth of the chattering quadruped.

Jacko retreated to his habitation, exhibiting manifest signs of wrath and indignation. The captain of the vessel, who was well acquainted with the character of the monkey, who would never suffer a trick to be played upon him, without retorting in kind, advised the painter be particularly cautious, or the monkey, would do him some injury.

The painter, however, laughed at the idea—and soon after he left his work, and entered a coffee house on the quay, where in drinking a cup of coffee, and in conversation with some friends, he passed half an hour.

conversation with some friends, he passed half an hour.

In his absence the monkey left his retreat—and passed through a port on to the painter's stage, where all his pots, brushes, &c., were deposited. He commenced an attack on the ropes which held the stage—and employed his time so well, before the painter appeared, two of them were nearly severed—and when the unsuspecting artist placed his foot on the stage for the purpose of resuming his work, the ropes broke, and painter, pots, paints, and brushes, were precipitated without ceremony into the dock.

Then commenced the triumph of the monkey, who sprang to the gunwale, and while gazing on the floundering foe, he evinced his delight by his gesticulations and his loud chatterings!

The artist was fished out, but his paints, of course were lost, and his clothes were saturated with the briny fluid. His rage was unbounded. As soon as he was safely landed, he seized a club and rushed on board, the vessel, threatening vengeance on the monkey, which he undoubtedly would have killed on the spot had not Jacko wisely retreated to the maintopmast cross trees, where he sat looking down triumphantly on his enemy, who was pacing the deck, uttering imprecations innumerable.

The painter then proceeded to his house, and returned with his fowling piece, well charged with buck shot, determined to bring Jacko down by fair means or foul—but the captain seeing the danger which was about to befal his mischievous favorite, appeased the foul—but the captain seeing the danger which was about to befal his mischievous favorite, appeased the anger of the painter by offering to pay him for the loss of the materials, and the damage to his clothes. A treaty was concluded—but Jacko could not be easily convinced of the sincerity of the opposite party, and fearing some mishap, maintained his position on the cross trees for several days.

COMPLIMENTARY LEGACY TO MR. HUME.—An old COMPLIMENTARY LEGACY TO MR. HUME.—An old maiden lady, named Cummings, who has resided for many years out of her native country, and who lately died in the Rue de Provence, Paris, has bequeathed a box scaled up, which she stated to contain jewels, &c. to Joseph Hume, Esq. M. P., believing him to be not only "an excellent arithmetician," but the only honest man in the House of Commons. These jewels are to be presented to the lady of the honorable member.

who would'nt be a Widow?—We understand, says the Boston Traveller, that a certificate, under the late navy pension act for widows, &c., has been received in the pension office in this city, which entitles the widow of a captain to the very comfortable sum of $20,000 arrearages, besides the continuance of $50 a month (half pay) during her natural life.

This is by no means a solitary case. We know three widows who are now enjoying similar evidences of a nation's justice and gratitude, and hope they may live many years, and derive an ample support from live many years, and derive an ample support from the treasury of the nation. One of the cases to which we refer, is that of a widow, whose husband, a gallant officer of the revolu-tion, fought, and bled, and died in the last war, in de-fence of his country. At the time of his death, he left the widow five or six children—the only legacy of a gallant soldier. The widow reared her children, and at last saw them all well established in life. Some of them died; others migrated to distant countries; and one, on whom the mother had lavished all that her industry could afford, abandoned her in her old age, and the helpless widow was obliged to take shelter in the alms house. Here she remained up-wards of five years, subject to all the ills of a paumer; it gave her opwards of ten thousand dollars in back pay, and the ample income of fifty dollars per month, for the future. She left the alms-house, and is now at ease; but with all the fondness and virtue

WANT OF MEMORY.—An anecdote is related in the "Psychological Magazine," of a German Statesman, who having called at a gentleman's house, the servants of which not knowing him, was asked for his name, which he had, however, so totally forgotten, that he was under the necessity of turning round to a friend, and saying with great earnestness, "Pray tell me who I am, for I cannot recollect."—London

Grose, in his entertaining little work the Olio, rethan that we have just quoted. Not having immediate access to the original, we shall relate the anecdote from recollection. Parson Harvest was perhaps the most absent man ever heard of, and a variety of whimsical proofs of his infirmity of memory ar lated in a very amusing way by Grose. The Parson was often known to forget not only the names of his most intimate acquaintance, but his own. On one occasion he called at the house of a friend, and informed the servant that he wished to speak to his master.
"What name shall I announce?" inquired the footman. Harvest was quite at a nonplus, and scratching his head, replied—"Name, name!—why, young man, I really can't recollect just at this moment,"—but, added he, "I see a gentlemen on the other side of the street who knows me—stop a moment, I dare say he will recollect what has somehow slipped my memory." Upon this he crossed over to his friend, but having unfortunately forgotten his name too, he exclaimed, "Well, Mr. ——, how do you do?" "Ay," replied the gentleman, "Parson Harvest, is it you?—I am glad to see you," when to his surprise the Parson balted over the ways and informed the servere. bolted over the way, and informed the servant who and what he was, upon which he was ushered in, in PEDESTRIAN FEAT.—On Monday se'night, the match between Townsend and Dinkwater, for 200 match between Townsend and Dinkwater, for 200 sovereigns, to pick up 300 stones, at a yard apart, and bring them singly back to the basket, came off. Drinkwater to pick up with the hand, and Townsend by the mouth. The plans pursued by the men essentially differed, Townsend picking up his first seven or eight stones, and then going right away to the three hundredth, doing the farthest 160 first, whilst Drinkwater began at the nearest, and working his way straight up, so leaving his longest rups to the last. straight up, so leaving his longest runs to the last. The entire distance has been calculated at 51 miles 540 yards. When half this word had been completed, Drinkwater was most decidedly the favorite. After this he fell off in his pace, and ultimately his distress became pitiable; he staggered wildly about; his eyes were gone, and he was caught in the arms of a bystander, leaving nine stones at the extreme end un-touched. Townsend ran on, was nearly as fresh at the end as when he started, and completed his task in eaving nine stones at the extreme end un-
